ELECTROLYSIS

Electrolysis

A procedure for removing individual hairs from the face or body by destroying the growth center with heat energy. Using a very fine probe which is inserted into the hair follicle and removed with tweezers.

PROCEDURE

- The practitioner selects a metal probe that slides easily into the hair follicle.
- The probe is typically 50 to 150 μm for all three modalities.
- The probe is inserted to the depth of the hair matrix, the site where hair is formed.
- The power and duration of the electricity are started at the lowest setting and then gradually increased until the hair comes out as easily as possible.
- If the patient experiences significant discomfort, the settings can be lowered.
- The practitioner repeats the same procedure all over the area.

RESULT

The result lasts for a long time after finishing all required sessions.

COST
